

Athanasaki Athanasia

Dr Athanasia Athanasaki is a neurologist with special interest in dementia and other associated neurodegenerative disorders and is a research fellow of the Second Department of Neurology, National & Kapodistrian University of Athens, Attikon University Hospital, Greece. She is a PhD candidate in Normal Pressure Hydrocephalus. She is a collaborator of Dr Paraskevas, Professor of Neurology and Neuropsychology, in the dementia outpatient clinic and the dementia ward and one of the investigators responsible for the conduction of the EVOKE / EVOKE+ trial in the aforementioned department.

Dr Athanasaki holds an MSc in Clinical and Experimental Neurosurgery from the School of Medicine in National and Kapodistrian University of Athens. She is the main author of a review and meta-analysis with the topic of Type 2 Diabetes Mellitus as a Risk factor for Alzheimer's disease. She has participated in many national and international conferences as a speaker or with posters. She also has good knowledge of English and French language.