

Christodoulou Irene

I was born in Thessaloniki in 1970. I studied at the Aristotle University of Thessaloniki, School of Medicine, from 1989 to 2005. I received my specialization in General Surgery in 2003, after a 6-year specialization at the AHEPA and G. Gennimatas Hospitals of Thessaloniki. The subspecialties I chose during my specialization were Plastic Surgery and Pediatric Surgery. I received a year of training from the Emergency Medical Service and certification after exams in 2003. I received my Master's Degree in Hepatobiliary Pancreatic Surgery in 2005 from the Democritus University of Thrace. I have completed further training in Athens in the field of Dermatology at Andreas Syggros Hospital. I have completed further training in Rome and Brussels. I worked for the National Health System for 18 years in various hospitals in Thessaloniki and the province. I served for 3 years as editor-in-chief of Greek and international academic journals, managing the company Renaissance Medical Publishing. Currently, I am engaged in the education of doctors at a private level, through the Instateacher platform. I am the author of a large number of books and scientific papers in the Greek language, including the book entitled "PTSD: Interventions for managing stress".
