

Grigoriadou Lavrentia

She is a Psychologist (MSc) and a PhD candidate at Panteion University, whose research focuses on speech disorders in patients with schizophrenia. She graduated from the Department of Psychology at Aristotle University of Thessaloniki (AUTH) in 2020. Following that, she completed the Master Program in "Neurosciences and Neurodegenerative Diseases" at the Medical School, AUTH. She is currently undergoing training in the Cognitive Psychotherapies program "IOANNIS PAPAKOSTAS". Since 2022, she has been working as a Psychologist at the Day Hospital

Center NPO "IASON," assisting individuals with mental health issues. She has collaborated as a researcher at the Laboratory for the Study of Neurodegenerative Diseases at the Center for Interdisciplinary Research and Innovation at AUTH. Additionally, she worked as a research assistant at the Life and Health Sciences Research Institute at the University of Minho, in Portugal. She has also volunteered at the Day Centers of the Hellenic Society for Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders in Thessaloniki. She is a regular member of the Hellenic Neuropsychological Society. She possesses a combination of knowledge in clinical and molecular/laboratory techniques. Her clinical and research interests include cognitive disorders in patients with dementia and neurodegenerative diseases, as well as in individuals with psychiatric disorders. Furthermore, she has investigated the relationship between chronic stress and Alzheimer's disease, as well as the role of exosomes in the prognosis and diagnosis of the disease.